Procurement Competency Learning Curriculum:

The national procurement competency framework and associated online tool - the procurement development framework - can be used to assess skills, identify training needs and support career planning. In addition these documents can be used to build your job specifications, support recruitment assessment centres and identify formal learning and development options.

This document is the learning curriculum that categorises available training and development by procurement competency and working level. This allows for self-assessment of competencies against current job requirements or career aspirations, providing recommended training and professional development to build or expand capability to the appropriate or desired level.

These documents are accompanied by an Excel spreadsheet (learning curriculum at a glance) that mirrors the competency framework, but displaying it from the perspective of all the training and development available, and which competencies each training or development offering addresses. This allows individuals, their managers or capability teams to review what competencies and skills each learning offering targets and also to search by competency to assess learning offerings targeting that need.

New entrants, practitioners and leaders in procurement have the option of progressing their professional development and accreditation journey with a number of professional bodies, including the Chartered Institute of Purchasing and Supply (CIPS) and World Commerce and Contracting (WCC). Or, depending on their role, something more generic like the Association for Project Management (APM) or Chartered Management Institute (CMI).

The CIPS Corporate Award programmes cater to many competencies across the framework and the Scottish Public Sector has access to the following from the Scotland Excel Academy at a negotiated discount.
